Health Care Consumerism in a Marketplace Environment

About our study

Since 2013, Liazon has surveyed hundreds of thousands of employees about their experiences using Liazon benefits marketplaces. This survey targeted employees with 2016 Open Enrollment dates.

What we learned

Our data show that after moving to a benefits marketplace, employees became savvier, more satisfied, benefits consumers. This is as a result of transparency, combined with education and decision support tools, which together engage and empower employees to take ownership of their benefits selection and overall financial health.

Employees really value the unique capabilities they're being offered in the marketplace...

find expanded product offerings important.

97%

find exposure to the true price of benefits important.

98%

find the ability to choose their own benefits (rather than have their employer choose for them) important.

96%

find extensive education and decision support tools important.

...and they are becoming more confident and savvy health care consumers as a result.

85%

of employees are more aware of the cost of medical care than they were prior to the marketplace.

83%

of employees better understand what their health insurance and other benefits cover than they did prior to the marketplace.

85%

of employees are more engaged in their health care decisions than they were prior to the marketplace.

82%

of employees are more confident in their health care decisions than they were prior to the marketplace.

Despite any initial concern about using a benefits marketplace, employees are glad their employers made the move.

While only 16% of employees were originally excited about using a marketplace to choose their benefits...

79%

are now glad their employer made the switch.

After using the marketplace, 94% were satisfied with their experience.

Only 5% said they wouldn't want their future employer to offer a benefits marketplace.

Employees don't just appreciate the experience, they are also making good selections for themselves and their families!

And they are thoughtful about the decisions and choices they're making.

58% said they chose the benefits they did because

"the benefits provided the right level of coverage."

Only 28% chose based on cost.

By empowering employees and engaging them in the selection process, employers are putting the power back in the hands of the consumer. And both employees and employers are seeing enhanced value as a result.

But don't take our word for it...take theirs!

"The best part of the marketplace to me was the ability to choose from many options and tailor a plan that meets my family's needs, as well as the ability to control the cost of that coverage."

"I liked being able to read the descriptions of each health plan offered - all in one place. No pages to flip through. It was right there, no matter where I logged on from - home or work."

"I love how the Marketplace lets you compare plans and gives you a visualization of the employee/employer contributions."

"I love that I can pick and choose what benefits I want, and that I am not stuck with only one option."

"I liked that I could sit down at home online and review all of the choices with my spouse so that we could correctly choose what we could afford and need together. It also gave us time to go back and make changes if needed."
